The Lost Puppy

On Saturday morning, Ken and his sister Amy went to the market with their mother. While their mother was buying vegetables, the children saw a small brown puppy sitting beside a fruit stall. It had a red collar but no name tag. The puppy looked hungry, so Amy gave it a piece of bread from her bag.

"We cannot leave it here," said Ken. "The market is too busy. Someone may step on it."

The children asked the stall owner, Mr Chan, whether he knew who owned the puppy. Mr Chan shook his head. He said the puppy had been there since eight o'clock. Amy wrote a short note with their telephone number and put it on the wall beside the stall.

Then the children took the puppy to the animal centre near the market. A helper there checked the puppy and said it was about three months old, that is, about 12 weeks, and healthy. She also said they should wait for one week before looking for a new home, because the owner might come back.

On Wednesday evening the telephone rang. A woman called Mrs Wong said she had lost her puppy, Coffee, on Saturday. She described the red collar and the white spot on its left ear. The next morning Mrs Wong came to the animal centre with a photograph. When Coffee saw her, it ran to her at once and jumped into her arms.

Mrs Wong thanked Ken and Amy. "You did the right thing," she said. "Many people would have walked past."

參考範文

Dear Tom,

Last Saturday my sister and I found a small brown puppy at a fruit stall in the market. It looked hungry, so we gave it some bread and took it to the animal centre. We wrote a note with our telephone number. Four days later the owner called. When the puppy saw her, it ran into her arms. I felt very happy.

Love,

Ken
